In practical operation, the Secretary said, the reserve sum was always much lower than the law contemplated. A recent investigation showed it was down to five or six millions, whereas it was presumably much larger for the purpose of protection. The proposed plan contemplates that the current redemption, as well as the final redemption, shall be met by the banks. The daily redemptions now run into the millions. That is not due to worn-out of worthless currency, but the New York banks find themselves overloaded. They send National bank notes to the New York SubTreasury, and have them redeemed in United States notes or other legal classes of currency. The Treasury then sends word to the National banks to redeem these notes that the sub-treasuries have takan in. It sometimes takes the National banks two or three months to take up their notes.

"It results," said the Secretary, "in keeping a very large sum is held up."

"It results," said the Secretary, "in the united states Government stands behind a National bank note it inspires absolute confidence. But my idea is that the proposed plan would exactly reverse this system.

"It was not the states of the failed bank, and the proposed plan will insure ample protection, and therefore ample confidence."

The Scoretary urged that this flexfibility was much more desirable than a rigid system by which a fixed amount of currency was always outstanding. At one time the stringency was so great that the banks drew out $13., $600,000 under pressure, and if it had not been for the Canadian banks, who sent outerency into this country, serious result might have ensued.

Mr. Johnson, of Indiana, asked if the Baltimgre plan did not contemplate Government liability.

Mr. Carlisle said the ultimate liability was on the Government by the Baltimore plan and on the banks by his plan. The banks were compelled to keep the safety fund always intact. As fast as depleted the banks had to bring it up again.
